

Who Owns the Past? Who Owns the Future?

The Ethics of Heritage and Planning

Bibliography and Links:

“Buying, selling, owning the past,” Stanford Multidisciplinary Teaching and Research [link to site]

Robin Attfield, The Ethics of Environmental Concern (Atlanta: University of Georgia Press, 1991).

Christopher D. Stone, “Should Trees Have Standing?” in Should Trees Have Standing (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009), revised essay from 1972 original.

Richard R. Wilk, “Whose Forest? Whose Land? Whose Ruins? Ethics and Conservation.” Sci Eng Ethics 5 (1999): 367-374.

Sara Jo Peterson, “The Ethics of Urban Planning.” Planetizen, June 26, 2006 [link]

J. Ballet, N. Sirven, and M. Requier-Desjardins, “Social Capital and Natural Resource Management: A Critical Perspective.” The Journal of Environment Development 16 (2007): 355-374.

Chip Colwell-Chanthaphonh, “The Archaeologist as World Citizen: On the Morals of Heritage Preservation and Destruction,” in Lynn Meskell, ed., Cosmopolitan Archaeologies (Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 2009), pp. 140-165.

Questions to Consider:

Who should own the cultural relics of the past? Museums? Successor populations? No one? Who should make decisions about preservation or destruction?